

New Descriptors, Same Funds

In January 2007, we're giving our funds new descriptors. The funds themselves will stay the same, but the new descriptors will clearly label what asset class they represent. The chart on page 2 lists these new descriptors.

All the funds in our portfolio will continue to be managed by outside, professional, experienced investment managers, who are identified in the SPP Investment Guide.

Our goal is to provide additional information that will help you understand what asset classes you're investing in when you choose investments. As financial planners will tell you, a good investment strategy focuses on asset classes rather than individual funds within a class. Diversifying among asset classes, in proportions guided by your time horizon and risk tolerance, will put you on the right path to securing your retirement income.

To help you diversify your investments, we encourage you to use the Ibbotson Questionnaire, available on our Web site and in the SPP Investment Guide. Through a series of questions, it guides you to a model portfolio that reflects how long you'll have your funds invested before you begin using them (time horizon) and the degree of volatility you're comfortable with in your investments (risk tolerance).

Bottom line: it's about to get a lot easier to focus on the asset class of your investments. Take advantage of our new descriptors to review your portfolio and make sure you're on the right path to build your retirement income.

Managed vs. Index

You may have noticed "managed" or "index" in the new descriptors we're going to use for SPP's fund choices starting in 2007 (see the chart on page 2). We know you may not know what they mean, so here's a quick primer on the difference between "managed funds" and "index funds."

Managed funds are funds that use an "active management" strategy, in which the fund managers attempt to beat the returns of a market index using their own informed, independent judgment to make investment decisions. The index they're trying to beat may be constructed by such companies as Standard and Poors, Morgan Stanley, or Frank Russell.

Managers using active management believe they can outperform the market average by finding stocks or bonds that will provide superior total return. These managers use research and analysis of the companies or bonds within an index to help them make decisions. Since active management takes more research, managed funds tend to charge more for administrative costs, which affect the net performance of the

New American Funds Trading Restriction Policy

Effective October 2, American Funds will implement new procedures to reduce frequent trading within the Growth Fund of America (GFA). American Funds says it's taking this action in response to a recent increase in the use of frequent, short-term trading.

Participants who conduct frequent trades drive up trading costs for GFA, which reduces returns for all long-term investors in the fund. American Funds has determined it's now time to implement the frequent-trade restrictions found in the GFA prospectus.

The restriction will apply to situations where an exchange with a value equal to or greater than $5,000 is made out of the GFA. Once the exchange out occurs, an exchange of $5,000 or more back into the GFA will be blocked for 30 calendar days from the date of the exchange out.

New SPP Tool Online

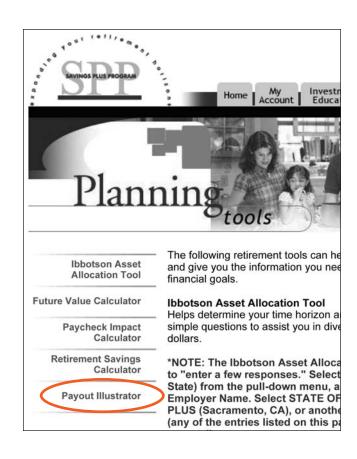

Have you seen the latest tool on our Web site? It's the "Payout Illustrator," designed to help you estimate how long your money will last when you retire or separate from State service or otherwise become eligible for distributions from your SPP account. This easy-to-use tool will help you calculate:

- how much money you can receive each month or year based on the fixed time period you select; or
- how long your money will last based on the fixed annual payment you select.

To use the Payout Illustrator, you'll need to type in your current account balance (or your assumed future balance), and your estimated annual rate of return.

We also offer three other online calculators. They help you learn how to save more, how your money can grow, how to plan for your retirement, and how to diversify your investments using asset allocation.

You can find all these tools at www.sppforu.com under the "Planning Tools" tab.

fund. However, if the fund manager consistently exceeds the index benchmark over a long time period (3, 5, or 10 years), the fund's investors will reap the benefit of higher returns.

Index funds use the opposite approach, known as "passive management." Index funds seek to match the performance of the overall market (or some part of it) by mirroring its composition. For the overall U.S. market, that index could be composed of small, medium, or large companies; an international index could be composed of international companies; a bond index could be composed of a group of bonds, domestic or international.

Managers using passive management don't try to outperform the market; they aim to match it. Investors who prefer passive management believe in the "efficient market" theory, which holds that markets constantly incorporate and reflect all information, so stock picking is futile. Index funds have far lower expenses, so the charges to investors are typically lower than for actively managed funds.

So which funds are better for you - managed or index? Advocates of index funds point to the fact that many managed funds fail to match the index over a long period, let alone beat it. On the flip side, advocates of managed funds argue that research gives them the opportunity to be selective and invest in companies within an index that will outperform the other companies in that index.

The choice is yours. Either way, first focus on asset allocation to diversify your portfolio. Then you can decide between an index fund or managed fund within the asset classes you choose. The use of diversification and asset allocation as part of an overall investment strategy does not assure a profit or protect against loss in a declining market.
